The Receiving Instrument Located in Been Made With an Immenses Deposit

At Ogden, N. J., there is a mass of iron ore a mile long standing perpendicular and extending into the bowels of the earth to great but unknown depths said to contain several hundred million tous of magnetic material. As the violent storms and uprushes in the sun produce disturbances on the earth's magnetism, which are recorded on the magnetometers at the Kew and other observatories, it has occurred to Mr. Edison, says the New York Herald, that the strength of the solar disturbance, as exerted on our planet, could "be increased ermously by utilizing a vein of magnetic fron ore, and running around the body of ore several miles of wire, forming an inductive circuit, into which werful electric currents would be thrown by any disturbances of the earth's magnetism.

"By the use of instruments every change," he says, "could be recorded, and by the use of the telephone all sounds produced on the sun would be heard on our planet." He is, accordingly, erecting telegraph poles on each side of the Ogden ore hill and parallel ith 1°, on which he is coiling an insuated wire many times around the whole area where the earth's magnetic lines eave the iron mountain and extend into space. The two ends of the long wire will be taken into his observation station
